Dedication

We, the Class of 1967, receive great pleasure in dedicating this yearbook to you, Dr. James McQuade. During the past three years, you have seen us through many ailments—major and minor. The qualities of kindness and understanding which you have always displayed will long remain in our hearts. You have earned our deepest respect and gratitude and we would like to express our very sincere Thank You, and remember . . .

Foreword

The construction of the new wing of our hospital is yet another reminder to us of the continuous progression of our profession—a profession for which we have been molded these past three years, and a profession for which we feel so much pride as we finally take our place as nurses.

What Is A Nurse?

"A nurse is the gentle touch that soothes a fevered brow—a kindly beacon in the fog of delirium—a wise and knowing hand that transforms anguish into blessed sleep.

Arms that can tenderly cradle a newborn child—or give supporting comfort to a wounded soldier far from home.

Her voice is the resolute voice of youth, when first she proudly repeats the pledge of Florence Nightingale—and the vibrant tones take on added richness with the maturity of years.

Her beauty is the true beauty that stems from an inner loveliness of spirit—and the language she speaks is a universal language that knows no barriers of nationality or tongue.

A nurse is a quick step in a dim corridor at night—a crisp silhouette of hope, as the ambulance sirens wail—the quiet competence that dispels hysteria and panic in the sick room—and the watchful sentinel through the long vigil when the spark of life is at low ebb.

Hers are the swift, sure movements of the trained technician in the operating room—and a resourceful ingenuity pitted against the elements in the disaster area.

She is a delicate combination of skills and trained intuition.

She ministers to the physical, the emotional, and the spiritual needs of those in her care.

She knows the inter-dependence of spiritual well-being and physical recovery—the balance between scientific skills and the benevolence of the Divine Healer.

Untiring in her zeal—unwavering in purpose—and firm in the exercise of her duties—she encourages her patient—step by step—along the road to recovery—or, if God ordains, to a happy reunion with Him in the life beyond.

A nurse is the dedicated embodiment of God's own concept of Mercy."
